THE WHITE MAN'S BURDEN

YET AGAIN, British streets became a battleground in a war between young thugs and police as another West Indian Carnival in London's Notting Hill area degenerated into violence and mayhem during last August Bank Holiday. Statistics for this latest orgy of anarchy and terror list over 170 people injured, including 11 police. 1,200 police officers were actually required on duty at the carnival, while a further 4,000 were needed to stand by in reserve. These numbers will give the nation some idea of the astronomical cost of the police operation — a cost that will have to be borne by the British public. This most recent outbreak of street war at the carnival is merely one of many that have occurred at the annual event over many years. The British people are most certainly becoming heartily sick of this regular pantomime of crime and disorder, which ties down vast police resources that are sorely needed to cope with the growth of lawlessness elsewhere.

Characteristically, spokesmen for the political 'establishment' tried to play down the significance of the trouble, with Home Secretary Douglas Hurd saying that: "It's a shame that what was an enjoyable occasion for thousands was spoiled at the very end by the criminality of a few." In fact, this 'few' consisted of several hundreds of mainly black youths, who assaulted and hurled missiles at the police. A total of 310 people were arrested — which must amount to only a fraction of those guilty of disorder and other criminal acts, such as drug-pushing. Even if it could be proved that all those causing trouble were only a minority of the people in attendance at the Carnival, it still remains a fact that other carnival events, such as have been taking place all over Britain for generations, do not produce this kind of criminal violence nor require such vast police resources to deal with them.

The truth is that the Notting Hill Carnival, and the regular trouble that takes place at that event almost every year, is just one of many symptoms which demonstrate the cost to Britain of the disastrous multi-racial society that the politicians have foisted upon us. To this must be added the regular outbreaks of rioting that have occurred in racially mixed areas throughout the 1980s and are still occurring now, such as those in Bradford, Dewsbury, Peterborough and Wolverhampton in recent months.

It is no answer to these facts to say that a large portion of Britain's ethnic minority population is perfectly law-abiding. We are quite prepared to admit that this is true.

But what is equally true is that where substantial ethnic minority communities are settled in areas where they live in close proximity to the indigenous British populace the result is a much higher-than-average level of criminality and public disorder.

After yet another Notting Hill Carnival riot, we count the cost of Britain's multi-racial society

Above: the thin blue line. A squad of police link arms to provide a defence against a rampaging carnival mob. Police resources are so stretched that even women (as in foreground) apparently have to be used for such riot-control operations. Below: Yet one more 'reveller' arrested for disorderly conduct. In this affray the rioter seems for a moment to have grabbed hold of one of the police officers' truncheons. These policing operations seem doomed to take place every year, at enormous cost to the British public, simply in order to allow the West Indian community its annual jamboree. In fact, the patience of the British people is now fast running out.

FAMILIAR CARNIVAL SIGHT
Reveller hurls bottle at police

Britain has its own native-born criminals — far too many of them. We would have a huge crime problem in this country without the ethnic minorities.

But there can be no questioning the fact that the presence of the ethnic minorities here has grossly aggravated the problem, and called for the further dissipation of police manpower and resources that are already quite intensively enough occupied in dealing with our own home-grown criminals.

MEDIA COVER-UP

Many of the outbreaks of public disorder now taking place in Britain's urban areas and involving young Blacks or Asians are not even being properly reported in the media; they are being deliberately 'covered up' or, at the very least, played down in respect of their scale and importance. This paper has exposed serious outbreaks of rioting in places like Wolverhampton, Peterborough and East London quite recently of which the public have been allowed to know little or nothing, due to the concealment of the full truth by the press and

WHAT PRICE THE 'POST-WAR ORDER'?

SOVIET FOREIGN MINISTER Eduard Shevardnadze, when addressing the United Nations in New York recently, spoke of what he termed as a 'threat to world peace.' This threat, he claimed, came from nationalist ambitions, particularly in Europe. According to him, 'Nazi-style forces' are out to destroy what he called the 'post-war order'.

It is true of course that Jean-Marie Le Pen's Front National in France and Franz Schonhuber's Republikaner party in West Germany, and other patriotic movements in Belgium, Norway and elsewhere, have had some striking electoral successes in recent times. It is furthermore true that these successes hold out some hopes of more successes, both within these countries and further afield, possibly in Britain for example.

Whatever the truth or otherwise of Mr. Shevardnadze's description of the kind of forces involved, one thing is clear. Why should we in Britain, or for that matter our Anglo-Saxon kindred overseas or our racial cousins of Continental Europe, look upon the prospect of the 'post-war order' being destroyed as necessarily a bad thing? And why on earth would this be a 'threat' to peace?

What good has the 'post-war order' brought to any of us?

Just look at what befell Britain in the post-war period, just as soon as the super powers had finished carving up Germany and the rest of Europe between them. Shorn of her Empire and world position, our own country has lurched from one economic crisis to the next — as she stands exposed by her rulers to a whirlwind of uncontrolled international economic forces. As her own industries have been run down and her assets stripped for the profit of foreigners, her workers have been either thrown on the scrapheap or reduced to the level of coolies for the Japanese.

Meanwhile, one government after another has invited the millions of the Third World to invade our territory, whilst our own youth have been abandoned to drugs, hooliganism and anarchy. Britain today has sunk to a state of chronic insecurity in which she now enjoys neither well-founded prosperity nor even law and order — the latter being the first priority if there is to be any sort of community at all.

To varying degrees, all this has been the common lot of all our western nations under the 'post-war order' which Mr. Shevardnadze seems so keen to keep in being.

But now, at last, there is clearly a mood among decent folk of many nations which favours at least a start in putting an end to the monstrous abuses that the order of things under which we have lived since World War II has brought in its train. People are starting to feel that they have had a gutfull of alien immigration, of the ongoing tide of drugs from the Third World and of endlessly being told that it is their duty to go on pampering freeloading minorities of all kinds. In Germany all this goes, in addition, with a renewed upsurge in healthy national feeling tending towards the country's reunification — and who can blame those who harbour this feeling?

ASIAN LEADER HINTS AT INCREASE OF TERROR CAMPAIGN IN BRITAIN

THE PEOPLE OF BRITAIN cannot say that they have not been warned of what 'multi-culturalism' in their country is likely to mean for themselves and their children.

Evidently referring to his own religious community in Britain, a leading member of the Council of Mosques, Shabbir Akhtar, addressing a meeting in mid-September in Bradford of Moslem leaders from up and down the land, proclaimed: "Terrorism is the act of a powerless people."

Moslem militants have recently been bombing Penguin bookshops. This is all ostensibly part of their campaign to get Salman Rushdie's novel The Satanic Verses banned in Britain, Penguin being the book's publishers.

Following the lead given by Akhtar, his Moslem colleagues refused to condemn the bomb attacks. Indeed, they not only announced their intention of continuing their campaign to get the book withdrawn from sale, they spoke in terms of stepping it up.

Speaking for all of them, Akhtar declared that the 'civil disobedience' campaign would continue until Britain surrendered to Moslem demands. Just for a start, Moslems will be staging an indefinite picket of Penguin publishers, presumably by means of the standard methods of street agitprop and mob action taught to them by Britain's own home-grown Reds.

BOAST OF MEDIA POWER

Said Akhtar: "We now have unprecedented access to the media, and the Moslem spokespersonship is no longer in the hands of moderates or 'sold-out' individuals."

This was certainly a revealing comment, from out of the 'horse's mouth', so to speak, on how the British mass media is increasingly being used to peddle the causes of the ethnic minorities. At the same time, Mr. Akhtar's words on the subject do represent something of a contradiction of his earlier implication that Moslems were 'powerless'.

In fact, it is clear that the Moslems who have embarked on their campaign of book-banning and -burning are now planning a massive extension of this campaign. At their Bradford conference they stated their intention of contacting Moslem ambassadors and governments so as to put increased pressure on Britain to submit to their further wishes.

Just for a start, they are demanding that this country's blasphemy laws be extended to give Islam the same special protection reserved up to now solely for the traditional religious beliefs of the British people, and to put Islam in a position of equal status with Britain's own established churches. The Moslem creed, a wholly alien system of beliefs which down through history has not been noted for its friendliness to our own, would thereby be elevated into yet another exotic cultural import before which Britons would be expected to bend the knee in reverence.

Even more threateningly, the Moslems at their conference spoke of setting up a campaign to 'educate' non-Moslems on this issue and enlist their support. It is not known whether there is any connection between this and the other issue referred to by Shabbir Akhtar. Akhtar professed to be worried that, in their preoccupation with Rushdie, Moslems had yet to organise effective campaigns to fight the "increasing racism" which he alleged that Asian Moslems were suffering at the hands of their British host community.

GRAB FOR MORE POWER

As we have previously pointed out in this paper, these Moslems are making a concerted grab for yet more power in Britain. This is what the mayhem they have unleashed, nominally in connection with Salman Rushdie, is really all about. Shabbir Akhtar claims that Moslems have already made gains as a result of the anti-Rushdie campaign. His dark threats of an 'anti-racist' drive hint at how easy it might prove to switch the whole direction of this Moslem 'holy war' into what would amount to a war of conquest against the British people.

BOOK-BURNING IN BRADFORD
This picture shows the ritual setting alight of Salman Rushdie's book The Satanic Verses in front of a crowd of baying Moslems. If they succeed in getting this book banned, where will they stop?

If the British people do not wish to end up being trampled underfoot by alien forces in their own land, and in the process become a despised underclass, now is the time for them to wake up from their stupor. Now is the time for them to take control of their country's affairs back into their own hands. Now is the time to call an end to multi-culturalism in Britain — before it is too late!

MOSLEMS DEMAND CHANGE IN BRITISH LAWS

This mob in Stoke-on-Trent is demonstrating in favour of new legislation to ban books they do not like. They have the effrontery to presume that Britain, as their host country, should adapt its laws to suit their whims broadcasting services.

Even since the publication of our last issue early in August, a further riot occurred in Peterborough which involved 600 Asian youths rampaging through the city, some wielding sticks, knives and baseball bats, assaulting innocent bystanders and smashing shop windows. This took place on the night of August 20th and was only adequately reported in the local paper, Peterborough's Evening Telegraph.

The time is now long overdue when Britain must count the cost of the experiment in making the country multi-racial, an experiment begun in the 1950s and supported — indeed actively promoted — by every government, Tory and Labour, since that time.

We of the British National Party believe the cost is an excessively high one. The multi-racial experiment, far from bringing about racial harmony, has brought about only racial strife — in addition to the rocketing crime problem with which our police have to contend.

Contrary to what our politicians say, it is not too late to throw this policy into reverse. It is not too late to put an end to the multi-racial madness and to make Britain once again a homogeneous country, inhabited just by English, Scots, Irish and Welsh — with the addition of a few other Europeans.

We believe in this policy. That is why we believe that British Government must decide on two things:-

(1) A complete ban on all further non-white immigration.

(2) A firm programme of repatriation and resettlement whereby the members of the country's ethnic minority groups are required to leave this country and, either return to the countries of their ancestral origin, or, if this is not possible, to other countries in the Third World populated by races kindred to themselves and where they may live in harmony and peace.

Our party is today fighting hard to gain acceptance for such a policy. Join us and help us to make it a reality!

Tip off to 'community leaders' makes Tottenham drug raid total flop

ON SEPTEMBER 30th, the press gave big headlines to a police raid that had taken place the night before on Broadwater Farm Estate in Tottenham, where they had expected to get their hands on some very large hoardings of drugs. The operation, code-named 'Kingfisher', was said to have involved 200 officers, some in riot gear and with armed back-up. No doubt the intended effect of all this media hype was to give the impression that Maggie's forces of 'law and order' were 'getting tough' with the Broadwater Farm criminals in just the way the public has wanted them to do for a long time.

In these reports it was stated that police had seized 'substantial quantities' of cocaine and had made 24 arrests. So had the 'softly-softly' policing of Britain's black ghetto areas, as recommended in the fatuous Scarman Report some years ago, finally come to an end?

Some people might have thought so — until they read a little more of the small print underneath the glaring headlines. Here it was stated that, in order to avoid racial friction, the police had liaised with 'community leaders' some two hours beforehand, informed them of the intended operation and invited them to come along as witnesses so as to ensure that everything done was above board.

As soon as we read this, we knew that the raid would turn out to be ineffective. It was elementary common sense that these so-called 'community leaders' would tip off the drug dealers — where they were not actually drug dealers themselves — and the drugs would be mostly removed by the time the police came on the scene.

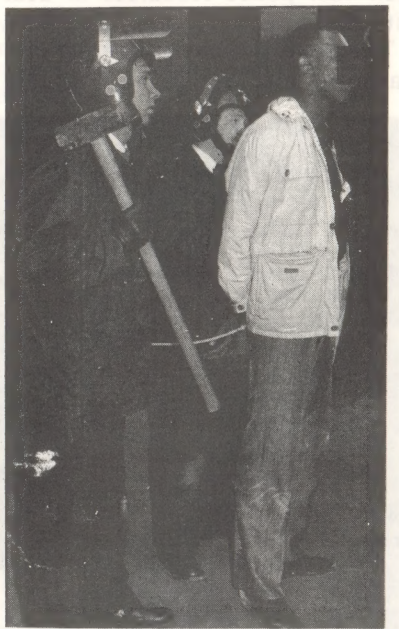

Our fears were confirmed by a report in the Sunday Telegraph the very next day, October 1st, in which it was stated that: "Residents of the Broadwater Farm Estate in North London said yesterday that an anonymous tip-off an hour before Friday's police raid gave drug dealers time to dispose of supplies." The report went on to say that: "The claim questions the wisdom of the police in informing in advance so many people — journalists and several community leaders — about the operation in Tottenham."

The report went on to acknowledge that police "netted what they believe to be only a small quantity of cocaine." This contrasts with the 'substantial quantities' mentioned in earlier accounts.

The raid was, in other words, a virtual flop and an expensive waste of police time — and all because, instead of doing the obvious and preserving strict secrecy right up to the last, the officers in charge of the raid let the cat out of the bag by warning 'community leaders' in advance and well in time to allow most of the drugs to be removed.

This was of course done in the cause of the politics of 'race relations', which these days take complete precedence over law-enforcement. No doubt, this had the blessing of the 'big boss', Metropolitan Commissioner Sir Peter Imbert, who is a known champion of the multi-racial society

This press picture, which shows one of the Broadwater Farm suspects being apprehended, is intended to convey an image of police 'toughness'. But in fact the raid on the Estate, of which 'community leaders' were warned in advance, was just one more exercise in softness

LATE IN AUGUST, 28-year-old scaffolder Jeff Challenor was ambushed from out of the blue, just outside his home, by a 15-strong gang of Asians. This attack took place in East London. Mr. Challenor's assailants beat him with clubs and a milk crate and slashed him with a kebab knife.

Mr. Challenor suffered multiple fractures to one arm, needed stitches in his legs and feet and was left on crutches with torn knee ligaments. He said: "I thought I was going to die. I thought I was going to be chopped to bits."

Earlier the same evening, a short distance away in Stepney, 19-year-old Paul Edmead was set upon in much the same way by what may have been the same gang. His face was slashed with a studded knuckleduster. This appears to have been the third time that he had been victimised in this way. He reported having suffered two other attacks in the preceding few weeks. In one he was assaulted with a craft knife.

Meanwhile, only a short distance away in Bow, part of the same East End borough of Tower Hamlets, a 14-year-old boy was stabbed in the shoulder with a dart in an assault by nine Asian youths. This was only the latest in a long string of such attacks in the neighbourhood.

All these attacks are now admitted to be part of a pattern of vicious, racially motivated violence against Whites. The culprits call themselves 'Raggers' — thought to be short for 'Ragamuffin' — on account of their deliberately scruffy dress. They are mostly Bengali immigrants, and their game is one of gang assaults on lone Whites, picked at random.

In the words of victim Paul Edmead: "The trouble is definitely getting worse, and someone is going to get killed around here unless it's stopped."

But that's become a lot to ask for in Britain as it is today. To be sure, plenty of tears are shed in both official and unofficial quarters about 'racial attacks'. The trouble is that these 'racial attacks' are only held to matter when it is alleged that immigrants are the victims and Whites the attackers, seldom the other way round.

No less an eminence than Home Secretary Douglas Hurd himself set the tone with an official report published in May. He and his Home Office cronies spilled enough ink to cover 127 pages with their agonising over racial attacks, but their worries stopped short with the immigrant population. All that troubled them was that, to use their own words, "the quality of life" of ethnic minorities might be damaged in the event of acts of harassment against them by British people.

There was nothing at all in the report about there being any need to uphold the quality of life of the white British majority, nor any word about protecting Britons from attacks by immigrants. In fact the report did not even acknowledge that such things were taking place.

The true fact of the matter is that there is a wave of violence threatening British people in their own land — with the politicians and mass media apparently completely unconcerned about it and only interested when violence threatens members of ethnic minority groups. If white British people are to defend themselves properly against the wave of violence being launched against them, they first need a voice to speak for them. That voice is the voice of British Nationalism, as expressed through the British National Party. If the British people do not support British Nationalism, they will have no future in their own country.

From the SLD front...

PADDY & CO. PLUMB NEW DEPTHS OF IDIOCY

IT SEEMS only yesterday that Social and Liberal Democratic Party leader Paddy Ashdown was proclaiming that his party (more or less the old Liberal Party under a new label of his own devising) was the "wave of the future," the new force in British politics that was well on the way to displacing Labour as the official Opposition, and after that...well who knew what?

In fact, it wasn't long ago either — perhaps only a year or so. But what a lot of water has passed under the bridge since then!

Having broken with his partner in the old Alliance, Dr. David Owen's Social Democratic Party (at Paddy's own behest), the SLD took a nasty knock in the last local government elections. The unseemly public squabbling with the SDP, which Paddy himself was right to the fore in promoting, is thought not to have been much of a crowd-pleaser as far as the punters of the Alliance were concerned.

Then of course there was the small matter of the efforts of this would-be future premier of Great Britain to cut a figure in parliament. Apparently, some of his own MPs have been so embarrassed by his exhibitionist antics that they stay away from the Commons these days. Their boss is too much of a clown even for their circus.

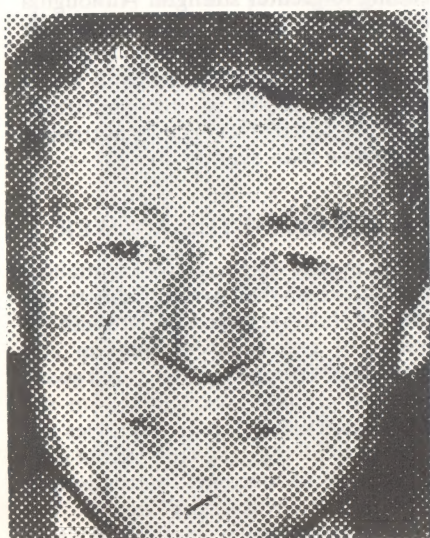

Not so long ago, Ashdown suggested that the KGB should be the model for curbing Britain's security services — producing a mirthful response which did little to add to the prestige of the 'Mother of Parliaments'. As the least respected party leader in the place, he is now widely regarded as little better than the Commons Jester.

VOTERS SWITCH TO GREENS

No wonder that in the Euro-elections two million voters, who might otherwise have backed the SLD, gave their crosses to the way-out Green Party instead. Apart from their ideas on saving whales,

PADDY'S COMING FATE
This is how Paddy Ashdown's likely political future is seen by The Sun cartoonist, who shows him 'walking the plank', aided by party colleagues David Steel and Cyril Smith

PADDY ASHDOWN
A clown even by the clownish standards of his own party elephants, the countryside and other attractive and agreeable things that we all want to save, the Greens bear more than a passing resemblance, as far as their other policies go, to the loony left.

Now it is even being suggested that Paddy and his increasingly unroad-worthy-looking SLD bandwagon could well be headed for a nasty smash-up as they career downhill towards the next General Election.

If so, this would be no undeserved fate.

The last thing on earth that any decent Briton is likely to want, when he views them in the sober light of day, is the likes of Ashdown and the SLD forming his government. This has to do even more with the actual programme of Paddy and his boys and girls than with the knock-about and slapstick with which they currently grace the British political scene.

EVADING THE ISSUES

Britain has a crisis with law and order. Vicious murder is rampant in this country as never before. IRA terrorists plant bombs to kill and maim soldiers and civilians alike. Tiny infants fall victim to sadistic child-killers. Paddy's answer? His conscience, he says, won't let him vote for the return of hanging! Britain has been thrown open to an invasion by the masses of Africa, Asia and the rest of the Third World. The results are to be seen on the streets of every one of our major cities and many of our smaller towns. Paddy's answer? He wants to give 3½ million Hong Kong Chinese an unconditional right of abode in Britain. Said Paddy, speaking at a recent rally: "I am proud that our party has been the lone voice in Britain prepared to stand up for the rights of our fellow citizens in Hong Kong." He is believed to have commented in a recent TV debate that Britain should, if necessary, be prepared to accommodate any number of Hong Kong Chinese by paying out whatever sums were necessary to build as many houses for them as they might need.

Of course, Paddy had no proposals for providing proper roofs over the heads of those large numbers of British families who have been priced out of the housing market in their own land. Nor did he seem overly concerned about what might be left of Britain's green belt after he and his party had finished turning it into a gigantic Chinatown.

NEW POOFS' CHARTER

Britain has a problem with a pushy and aggressive homosexual lobby. Mainly via the queer network, we are now threatened with AIDS. Paddy's answer? He and his SLD would lower the age of consent for homosexual relations to 16 — giving the perverts a freer hand than ever before to spread both their practices and their AIDS far and wide among Britain's youth.

Britain certainly needs a radical alternative to the Toryism of Mrs. Thatcher, which over the last decade has headed the country in the direction of a demoralised and de-industrialised Third World slum. But this alternative will not come from Paddy and his 'Democrats'. Where they stand is probably best hinted at by the fact that Paddy, who is said to speak Chinese fluently, saw fit to address his own party rally in that tongue when making some of his recent remarks in favour of unlimited immigration from Hong. Since the SLD is unlikely to get many votes at the next election, or thereafter, from British electors, perhaps Paddy is relying on future support coming from this more exotic source.

Mortgage rises product of faulty system

CHANCELLOR LAWSON, in announcing the raising of the base interest rate to 15 per-cent, has said that he regrets the move but finds it 'unavoidable'. The rise of course is driving up the cost of mortgages to an average increase of £62 a month. But is the rise 'unavoidable'?

Britain's base interest rate must go up, we are told, because West Germany has increased its rate. If the British rate remained as before, currency speculators would rush to buy German Marks and the Pound would experience a big drop.

But this is only because of Britain's adherence to the international free money market. If the Government, as it should do, slammed down firm curbs on investment abroad so as to ensure that British money stayed in Britain, our economy could be immune to international money movements. Interest rates at home would reflect the strength and health of the British economy and would not be dependent on what happened to other economies.

The Government, however, is tied hook, line and sinker to the idea of the free movement of money across the world — a system in which currency speculators can make millions overnight without contributing a jot to the real creation of wealth. That is why we have had to have the rise in interest rates, and why mortgages are now hitting the roof.

The Green way to Mini-Britain

THE GREEN PARTY, which held its first really highly publicised party conference, in Wolverhampton, recently, revealed to the nation as odd and cranky collection of specimens as can be found anywhere across the political spectrum.

Among the many thoroughly daft proposals to emanate from the conference was one that measures be taken to reduce the population of Britain by more than half — to about 25 million. This, the Greens declared, should be achieved by means of massive propaganda to persuade the British public that having very few children is 'socially responsible' and also by creating a new climate within the country in which childless families would not have the same social stigma attached to them as in the past (whatever that may have been).

Perhaps someone should go to the Greens and have a little word in their ears about the real source of the problems of world overpopulation.

NEED FOR MORE WHITES

The real source of these problems is not Britain, nor the nations of Europe, nor those of the White Commonwealth, nor the United States. For all these nations today have extremely low population growth — indeed some are breeding Third World immigrants and their descendants.

It is the coloured races that are flooding the world, not the Whites!

NOT WHITES' FAULT

If we are not to be swamped by this flood, what we need is not a low birth rate but a high one — in the case of heavily crowded countries like Britain, this being alleviated by a high rate of emigration to the open spaces beyond Europe.

Canada and Australia, for example, are still largely empty. They need to be filled up by white migrants, preferably British.

A transfer of population from the densely populated white countries to the sparsely populated ones — that is the best way to arrive at a more equitable relationship between population and resources. But as for trying to depopulate Britain by cutting the birthrate to a level much lower than the present dangerously low one — that is a recipe for national suicide.

But of course it could well be that that is precisely what the Greens would like to see — the national suicide of Britain and the great western nations, and the invasion of their national territories by the overspill of the coloured world.

Let's hope that the large numbers of people who voted for the Greens babies at below replacement level!

The real source of the problems of world overpopulation is the Third World — the teeming masses of non-white peoples who are now proliferating everywhere, in Africa, in Asia, in Latin America. And where there is high population growth in western countries it is only among those portions of the populace made up of

BRITAIN SLIDING INTO BANKRUPTCY

SHIPYARDS STANDING IDLE

The picture above is of Sunderland, whose shipbuilding industry has been let go to ruin while Britain buys vast quantities of foreign vessels

BRITAIN is fast heading for economic catastrophe because of the ridiculous level of imports that are now pouring into this country. Who says so? The Tory press says so!

Following the announcement of the trade figures for August, which showed the trade gap continuing to widen, The Daily Mail (September 27th) printed a frank commentary, which we are reproducing below. Headed 'We're on the foreign road to ruin', the commentary indicated how Britain is going bankrupt with her uncontrolled intake of foreign manufactured goods. As the commentary stated, the biggest contributor to the trade deficit the previous month was the enormous scale of motor car imports — 60 per cent of the total number of cars bought during the month, and this despite some recent improvement in the quality and reliability of British-made cars.

As the Daily Mail stated, the deficit in consumer goods was almost as bad. During August Britain imported £1.2 billion worth of TV sets, hi-fis, videos, washing machines and home computers. Barely more than half this value of the same goods were exported.

Even 'invisible earnings', such as those made through banking, insurance and consultancy services — proudly claimed by Tory Government apologists as our trade 'flagship' — are now being reduced, as, says the Mail, other countries are developing their own services and no longer need to import them from Britain.

DECLINE OF MANUFACTURING

All these facts underline what our paper has been saying for years: that banking, insurance and other service industries are no substitute for a strong manufacturing base. Britain's manufacturing base has been steadily whittled away over the past decade of Thatcherite Government. This is not to say that it was sound before Thatcher; it was not. But the 'Iron Lady's' obsession with the ideology of the 'free market' has exposed the British economy even more to international forces than ever in the past, and the outcome has been that we are heading in a direction where we will soon no longer have any manufacturing industry any more to call our own.

The present state of things also explodes another Thatcherite myth: that by exposing British industry to the full blast of international competition we would stimulate it into becoming more efficient and cost-effective, leading to greater strength. Although a few industries have attained greater efficiency, the motor industry, as stated, being one of them, this has not led to people going back to buying British products. In fact our balance of trade is now worse than ever.

NATIONALISM THE ANSWER

We in this paper have maintained over the years that British industry can only be fully restored to strength by means of policies of nationalism and protection. Foreign manufactured goods must be gradually excluded from the British market, as home industries are built up to fill the gap. This will not only enable us to become internationally solvent, it will also make full employment possible in a country that has known a high level of unemployment ment for many years.

Such policies, however, cannot be put into effect unless there is first the political will to extract Britain from the various international entanglements in which she is presently engaged which prohibit any such measures to defend our own industries. Foremost among these is the Common Market, which Britain must quit if she is to have any economic future.

WHY WE'RE INSOLVENT

Japanese cars lined up on a British quay having just come off the boat. These imports have helped to ruin a once-great British industry

Over the past decade of Thatcher Government, we have pursued a steady path to economic ruin. But it must not be forgotten that we were on the path of rapid decline for some time before that. Labour, just as much as the Tories, is bankrupt in terms of policies to halt the slide. Both are wedded to internationalism. Only through the nationalism of the British National Party will the road back to recovery be possible.

We're on the foreign road to ruin

BRITAIN'S trade gap is widening because shoppers can't resist splashing out on foreign goods.

Even though Chancellor Lawson has pushed up the cost of borrowing to almost penal levels, the taste for Japanese television sets, Italian washing machines, German cars or Taiwanese home computers is still raging, according to latest Treasury figures.

Foreign cars made the biggest contribution to the latest deficit. We imported £693million worth last month.

Added to those which had already been stockpiled for the August rush for C-registration vehicles, it meant that of the 500,100 new cars sold last month only 200,000 were made in Britain. The rest,

By PAUL EASTHAM
Industrial Reporter

60 per cent of all those leaving the showrooms, worth a total of £2.5billion, were imported.

Consumer goods are almost as bad. Last month we imported £1.2billion worth of television sets, hi-fis, videos, washing machines and home computers. We exported a mere £686million worth.

High-living consumers also paid out £963million for foreign food, wine, drinks, cigarettes, cigars and tobacco.

But our companies sold far less of our food to foreigners — only £512million worth, including whisky, cheese, beer, and smokers' supplies, went abroad. The last time our trade with the rest of the world was in the black was in 1986, when it was £66billion in surplus.

But then the spending boom took off and Britain has been in deficit ever since.

To make matters worse, 'invisible' exports such as banking, insurance, and consultancy, are being eroded as other countries develop their own services.

Latest figures also show that shoppers are still taking out more and more credit on their plastic and store cards, especially in the North where the rise in mortgage rates has not hit so hard because of lower property prices.

Britons have more credit cards than shoppers in the rest of Europe combined.

THE TELLTALE REPORT

This cutting is from The Daily Mail (September 27th). The Mail, though a staunch Tory paper that has supported Mrs. Thatcher's policies, now admits that Britain is heading for economic disaster on account of uncontrolled imports

THE COMMON MARKET, by accident or design, is steering every member nation to national ruin. All members have unemployment levels well in excess of those Western European nations outside the EEC.

The forced 'rationalisation' and consequent unemployment in every major industry throughout Europe has hit Britain badly, but she is not the only one; Spain, Ireland, Holland, Italy, Belgium, Luxembourg and France all have higher rates in the way of those out of work.

In Britain, coal mining and steel making — the very industries essential to a modern industrial economy — have been devastated. Britain's poor balance-of-payments position is even worse, when it is considered that it is only oil production and exports that are propping up the economy. And the oil won't last for ever.

On the right is a list of the countries of Western Europe, with their unemployment rates as measured in percentages of the workforces:-

The Common Market means

UNEMPLOYMENT

|------------------------|------|
| SPAIN | 20.6 |
| IRELAND | 18.7 |
| HOLLAND | 12.6 |
| ITALY | 12.0 |
| BELGIUM/ LUXEMBOURG | 11.2 |
| FRANCE | 10.6 |
| BRITAIN | 10.4 |
| DENMARK | 7.9 |
| W. GERMANY | 7.9 |
| PORTUGAL | 7.8 |
| GREECE | 7.6 |
| FINLAND | 5.1 |
| AUSTRIA | 3.7 |
| NORWAY | 2.2 |
| SWEDEN | 1.9 |
| SWITZERLAND | 0.7 |

It will be noticed that the bottom five countries in the table of unemployment are all non-members of the EEC, while the top twelve are all members!

These figures also nail a much-repeated lie concerning Britain and the EEC. The advocates of membership of that body claim that we are 'not big enough' to survive outside the Market. Yet the five nations with the lowest unemployment rates in Western Europe are all much smaller than we are — in fact their combined populations, when all are put together, add up to only slightly over half that of the United Kingdom!

NATIONS OUTSIDE E.E.C. THE MOST PROSPEROUS

And not only have these non-EEC nations comparatively low rates of unemployment, all are very prosperous — particularly Sweden and Switzerland, two of the wealthiest nations in the world.

These facts demonstrate, as do so many others, that Britain will only stand a chance of achieving real prosperity and a high rate of employment if she gets out of the Common Market and once again becomes the master of her own fate.

If this were to be done, Britain could soon achieve full employment by putting up protective barriers against the many foreign manufactured goods she is now importing, and organising her own industries to produce those goods in their place. Common Market rules will not permit this; outside the Market we could again make our own rules — like Sweden and Switzerland, for example!

COMMON MARKET H.Q.

From this building in Brussels, an army of bureaucrats send out an unending stream of directives to EEC member states concerning the conduct of their economies. The outcome is many millions out of work.

And so say all of us!

Jap magic? — It's just an insult

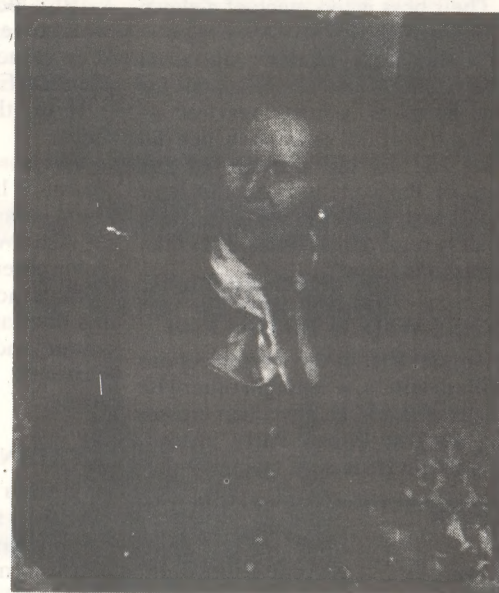

● ALMOST as soon as her plane touched down in Japan, Mrs. Thatcher made it clear exactly what she really thinks of us all. The remarks she made in her first speech were: "The combination of Japanese management and British workers is magic!"

While she doesn't shrink from fawning around these people, encouraging them to take over even more of our once famous industries, these are the most humiliating and insulting words she has uttered.

She should stand before the graves of prisoners of war, with an audience of survivors of that barbaric era, and repeat her infamous remarks, and ask those who built roads and railways in Burma under Japanese management if it was "magic."

In one statement, such as this, the Prime Minister has implied to our main competitors in world markets, that British management is in no way up to their standard.

Will she also concede, therefore, as the Japanese government has a large stake in industrial projects, that Japan must have a far more competent government than she leads? — J. A. Grimes, Dysart Avenue, East Cosham, Portsmouth.

● Mrs. Thatcher — insulting words.

The above letter was printed recently in The News, a local paper from the Portsmouth area. We are reproducing it here because it sums up perfectly our own feelings about our Prime Minister's grovelling attitude towards the Japanese. Nobody could have put it better than the reader, Mr. J.A. Grimes.

HOW TO STOP JAGUAR GOING AMERICAN

YET ANOTHER great British manufacturing company is in danger of foreign take-over. Jaguar, in deep trouble due to falling sales, has been subject to a 'rescue' operation by the American Ford Company, which has bought a 15 per-cent interest in the Coventry firm. It is generally believed that this is the thin end of the wedge of a process that will lead eventually to Ford's owning Jaguar.

Jaguar make some of the finest cars of their kind in the world, but they depend heavily on exports, particularly to the United States. With recent exchange fluctuations, their cars are now dearer in the US and many buyers there are turning to other makes.

Jaguar would not of course be in this situation if its main source of business lay in the home market. This would be possible if barriers were put up against Mercedes' BMWs and other foreign cars that compete directly with Jaguars in their own range. Then Jaguar would dominate the British market and enjoy huge sales in Britain as a result. Its export trade would then merely be the icing on the cake.

Even as things are, the Government, if it had any sense of patriotism, would act to prevent a Ford take-over by itself putting enough money into Jaguar to ensure its survival. Jaguar is not a 'lame duck'; it is an efficient and well-run company. It should be kept British — at all costs!

If Ford does succeed in taking over this great firm, it will be just one more dismal betrayal by the Government of British manufacturing industry, just one more sell-out to foreign interests.

PM shows total lack of grip

ADMIRERS and supporters of Mrs. Thatcher are fond of depicting her as the 'Iron Lady', a title once given her by a Russian journalist and which seems to have stuck. Maggie, her friends will have us believe, is resolute, firm and in every way in charge of the national situation.

Occasionally, this mask is stripped away and the reality of Mrs. Thatcher's mind and character is revealed underneath. What stands exposed is a dithering individual, hopelessly out of touch and out of her depth. Something of this was seen in a recent speech she made in the days following the Deal bombing. "When I was young," she said, "it seemed to me and many of my contemporaries that if we had good housing, good education and a reasonable standard of living, everything would be set and we should have a fair and much easier future...We know now that that isn't so."

The Prime Minister went on to put a series of questions. She asked: "Why is it that we have child cruelty in this age? Why is it that we have animal cruelty? Why is it that we have violence...Why is it that people take to terrorism? Why is it that people take to drugs?"

And she added: "Why, when you have got everything, do some people turn to those fundamental things which undermine the whole of civilisation?"

Coming from a Prime Minister, such plaintive whining, combined as it is with apparent bewilderment, is quite pathetic. Maggie refers to the time "when I was young..." But someone made of the stuff of a future national leader, even when young, should exhibit sufficient wisdom and common sense not to believe in the kind of liberalistic, not to say leftist, daydreams about material prosperity eliminating crime and violence. But apparently this is exactly what Maggie once believed!

The Premier seems now to have matured in outlook to the point at which she no longer entertains such illusions, but that is about as far as it goes. Having once harboured liberal certainties, she is now, on her own admission, splashing blindly about in a sea of uncertainty. She really cannot understand why people do such nasty things as kill other people, take drugs or ill-treat children. What a confession of mental impotence!

Perhaps someone should tell Mrs. T. that most murders and cases of child cruelty occur simply because we have an element in our population consisting of pure sub-human scum, which will never be changed by material security or affluence and can only be effectively dealt with by being liquidated, either by the gallows or some other less judicial method. In addition to this, terrorists like those of the IRA kill people because — contrary to what Maggie and some members of her

The Deal massacre: our reward for 20 years of pussyfooting and surrender

IN THE AFTERMATH of the appalling IRA bomb atrocity in Deal, which killed several young Royal Marines bandmen, Defence Secretary Tom King made perhaps the most fatuous of the many fatuous statements he has uttered during his disastrous political career.

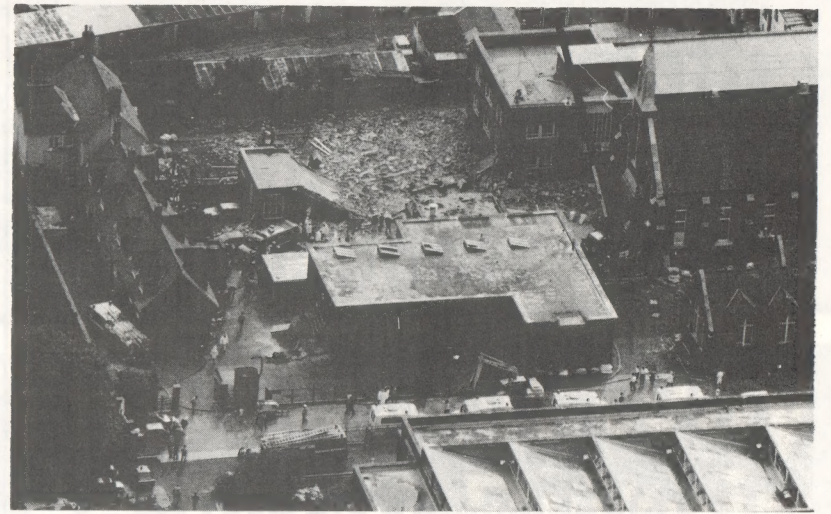

Speaking of the bombing, he described it as "killing just for the sake of killing." The outrage, he claimed, could have no political object because Britain had proved over the past two decades of Ulster violence that she was "not going to surrender to terrorism."

Mr. King, as usual, was talking poppycock. The Deal bombing, like all others of its kind, had a very definite political object, and one that the bombers are gradually achieving. It was in response to IRA terrorism, back in 1969, that the Government put an end to Ulster's self-governing status by abolishing the province's parliament at Stormont. It was in response to IRA terrorism that both Tory and Labour ministers secretly sat down and talked with the very republican gangsters who were then, and are now, continuing to shoot, bomb, maim and murder British people in both Ulster and the mainland. It was in response to IRA terrorism that Mr. King himself, acting together with Mrs. Thatcher negotiated the notorious Anglo-Irish Agreement, which, by giving the Government of the Irish Republic a say in Ulster's internal affairs, implicitly acknowledged that Ulster belongs to the Republic, and thus went halfway towards yielding to the republican gangsters the very thing they are seeking.

These facts should show that, far from never surrendering to terrorism, Britain's record in Ulster has been one constant process of surrender — on the instalment plan.

The Government's latest move in Ulster holds out little hope that there is going to be any change of course in this regard. As a successor to the bumbling and incompetent Tom King as Ulster Secretary, Mrs. Thatcher has appointed Mr. Peter Brooke. Having been a failure as Tory Party Chairman, Mr. Brooke has been shunted off to exile in Belfast as a consolation prize for his sacking from his former post. His appointment to his new job was obviously calculated according to the demands of internal Tory politics rather than in terms of Ulster's needs.

THE DEAL BARRACKS, AFTER THE BOMB BLAST
The IRA will continue these kinds of attacks as long as they see Britain continuing to make concessions towards republicanism.

WAR CAN BE WON — IF GOVERNMENT REALLY WANTS TO WIN IT

There are in fact no rational grounds whatever for Britain to be reeling back before the vicious criminals of the IRA. She has a fine army, first-class police and intelligence services at her disposal, and the brave people who make up the loyal majority in Northern Ireland, wherewith to exterminate the IRA in very short order. What exactly is the IRA? Merely a handful of gun-toting gangsters hiding behind Ulster's minority catholic community. Even the names of these scum are known to the security forces. They could be wiped out tomorrow.

The one thing lacking is the political will in Britain's rulers to do what is necessary to defeat and destroy these gangsters. The Government is afraid of the terrorists, afraid of the Irish Republic, afraid of what the EEC might say, afraid of the disapproval of the Americans. It is high time that Britain stopped grovelling to her enemies and cringing before their supporters abroad.

US General Douglas MacArthur once said: "There is no substitute for victory." It is time that Britain applied this maxim in Ulster.

KING
A leading exponent of surrender, he says: "No surrender!"

NEWS FROM THE NORTH

'Scots wha hae'

ANY SCOT who believed that the 'race factor' plays no significant part in Scottish political life received a rude awakening during the Glasgow Central by-election a little earlier this year.

In an article entitled 'Asians hold the key', the Glasgow Evening Times highlighted the fact that, apart from a substantial Asian community, the constituency also included the main Glasgow Mosque, the Islamic Centre, the Sikh Temple and the Jewish Institute.

A Mr. Gurdev Singh Birhisa was quoted as saying that there were some seats in Glasgow where the Asian vote was very significant. He claimed: "George Galloway won the Hillhead seat at the last election because most members of our community were behind him."

The existence of this substantial voting bloc did not go unnoticed by those who make it their business to indulge in the mad scramble for votes. Tory Minister William Waldegrave arrived in Glasgow and hotfooted it to meet representatives of the Chinese Students' Association before moving on to the Glasgow Central Mosque to woo members of the Islamic community.

For the Labour Party, the candidate together with Deputy Leader Roy Hattersley (who else?) were already reported as having visited the Central Mosque on the previous day. The candidate had already visited the Sikh Temple and was booked in for a return appearance — Labour had already circulated Punjabi and Urdu election leaflets and it was stated that the other candidates were expected to follow suit.

The article concluded by stating that former district council candidate Mohammed Sarwar was busy campaigning for a Labour victory while one of his direct opponents in the district council election, Mr. Khalid Pervez Rhaman, was just as actively working for an SNP win!

Tears of a clown

SCOTTISH SECRETARY Malcolm Rifkind has recently been seen to indulge in much shedding of crocodile tears over the American multi-national computer company Wang's decision to pull out of Stirling, with the consequent loss of 240 jobs.

As a direct result of Mr. Rifkind's party's policies towards multi-national companies, Wang received grants totalling £3.7 million. In a fit of self-righteous indignation, Rifkind informed the House of Commons that "some repayment to the Government might be appropriate." A figure of £400,000 has been mentioned. Even if this, or any other, sum of money is repaid it is sure to remain in Government coffers only until it is required for the next fly-by-night multi-national which comes along with the usual plethora of idle promises.

What a difference £3.7 million of government cash could make to providing real job opportunities for

RIFFKIND

Scotland's legions of young unemployed. But then they don't really matter, do they? After all, they are the future, and as such have no place in the Tory Party's 'me-now' society. Furthermore, they are only British!

Just a thought

COULD the recent proposal from that most conservative of organisations, the Adam Smith Institute, that the Hong Kong Chinese be resettled in one of Scotland's Hebridean Islands be in any way related to the fact that most members of this noted body reside in areas well remote from the Hebrides?

Of course not! Such liberal-minded, free-thinking gentlemen wouldn't be so cynical now, would they?

HIGHLANDER

BBC at it again!

A NEW ROW is brewing over plans by the BBC to show a documentary focusing on the army in Northern Ireland. True to form, the 'Beeb' is doing its very best in the film to portray the army in the worst possible light.

The film alleges that there was a 'near mutiny' among survivors of the Ballygawley bus bombing last year, in which eight members of the 1st Battalion Light Infantry were killed. The film quotes one member of the battalion as claiming that the resentment was over the officers' refusal to let men attend the funeral of the victims. According to this man, "the officers did not care or understand."

An army spokesman said that the BBC's allegations concerning 'near mutiny' were totally fabricated. Whether this is so or not, one thing is for sure: anything the BBC can do to undermine the standing of the army in Ulster it assuredly will do. When is the Government going to recognise that the BBC has become an enemy fifth column in Britain's midst, which should be rooted out without further ado?

YOUR LETTERS

Sir, — It is about time that there was an exposure of the stinking anti-white propaganda hype being spewed out by the controllers of Hollywood in film after film. It's time for a white backlash against this foul stream of filth maligning our race.

A great deal of this material is pure anti-white 'racism', yet no-one in Britain (where laws against 'racial hatred' are supposed to exist) seems prepared to prosecute the distributors of these products, or those of their home-produced counterparts.

There is of course one race that is never depicted unsympathetically in films. Actor arlon Brando drew attention to this in an interview with Playboy magazine in 1979, when he said: "You've seen every single race besmirched; but you never saw an unfavourable image of the Jew, because Jews were ever so watchful about that. They never allowed it to be shown on the screen."

No doubt this has something to do with the pedigree of the majority of those who control the motion-picture industry!

HARRY MULLIN
Glasgow

Sir, — We hear from news reports that Ulster Secretary Peter Brooke has recently been in conference with the Foreign Secretary of the Irish Republic during which the latter has demanded the reform — or, preferably, the abolition — of the Ulster Defence Regiment. One of the reasons for this demand is the story, not yet proven as true, that members of the UDR run a secret 'liquidation' squad which collaborates with loyalist paramilitaries to bump off IRA terrorists.

I have two things to say about this. The first is that it is disgraceful that Brooke is even prepared to talk to the Irish Foreign Minister about the UDR, instead of curtly telling him that it is none of the Republic's business. The second is that, there is such an organisation within the UDR which contrives to liquidate members of the IRA, all power to it! Clearly, Westminster does not want to win the war against the terrorists and ensure that Northern Ireland stays British. It is a good thing that there are others who do want these things and are prepared to take the steps necessary to achieve them. Let us hope these courageous men 'take out' as many IRA gangsters as possible.

IN BIRMINGHAM on September 30th the British National Party once again ran up against the establishment's unofficial but de facto ban on freedom of assembly for British Nationalists.

Some weeks previously, the party had put in an application to Birmingham City Council for the hire of a meeting hall for an indoor rally. Those making the application knew in advance that it would be refused, but the application was submitted nevertheless in order that it may be put on record. Predictably, the council duly replied that a hall was not available.

Repeating the procedure employed for its rally in Bradford the previous weekend, the party made an application to the police to hold an outdoor rally near to the city centre. As at Bradford, the police consented in principle but refused to disclose the chosen site until a very short time before the rally.

This made it impossible for the party effectively to advertise the location of the site in question. It did the next best thing by choosing Chamberlain Square, near the city centre, as the site for advertising the rally, planning to redirect people from that point in the event of the rally taking place at a different location in conformity with the wishes of the police.

Shortly before the rally, the police informed the organisers that the location agreed for the rally would be Martineau Square, also near the city centre. The police said at the same time that they would not permit party representatives to be present in Chamberlain Square to redirect people to Martineau Square — the pretext for this being that a large anti-BNP demonstration was planned for Chamberlain Square and if any BNP personnel appeared there there would be a possible breach of the peace.

As at Bradford, the BNP was therefore once again prevented from advertising its rally to the general public and, thereby, prevented from exercising its right to freedom of assembly in anything more than the purely nominal sense.

Such is the land of 'freedom' of which Prime Minister Thatcher continually boasts as she gallivants around the world lecturing other countries on how 'free' they ought to be!

Some consolation for these difficulties was obtained, however, in as much as Martineau Square is a very busy shopping area on Saturday afternoons, and large crowds were present to hear the BNP message. Further police obstruction prevented the BNP speakers using public address equipment, and the police, as at Bradford, insisted that the rally be limited in duration to half an hour. However, during that short time much interest was shown by local shoppers, as East Midlands Regional Organiser John Peacock gave a short address, followed by party leader John Tyndall. A good many leaflets were handed out and plenty of copies of British Nationalist were sold.

The event was given some coverage on the following Monday in Birmingham's local press.

The outdoor rally was then followed by an indoor meeting above a public house, at which John Peacock and John Tyndall again spoke, this time just to party members and supporters. At each meeting Birmingham Organiser Keith Axon acted as Chairman.

Due to the Birmingham rally being wedged into the middle of a very tight programme of major party activities, the attendance of party members and supporters was not as high as usual. With the Bradford rally only a week behind and the big London rally two weeks ahead, many activists said they would have to conserve their funds for the purpose of travelling expenses.

Most of those taking part in the day's events felt that the operation had been very much worthwhile. A good many Birmingham people heard about the BNP on the day, and this will undoubtedly help get the party known in Britain's second largest city.

Glasgow this year's football champs

GLASGOW BRANCH, resplendent in the colours of Rangers FC, were the victors in this year's five-a-side football tournament held between British National Party units.

The four finalists in the competition were Epping Forest, NE London, Glasgow and Liverpool. The finals were played out on a league basis, with everybody playing everybody. The results were: Glasgow 6 NE London 2; Liverpool 5 Epping Forest 3; NE London 12 Liverpool 3; Glasgow 10 Epping Forest 2; NE London 7 Epping Forest 3; Glasgow 3 Liverpool 1.

The trophy therefore goes this year to Scotland. It is expected that in 1990 Glasgow Branch, by right of being the holders, will be the hosts in the competition.

Thanks are due to all who took part, to Mrs. Isobel Hernon for organising light refreshments and to those local members in the NE London/Essex area who provided overnight accommodation for the guests from Scotland and the North.

THE WINNING TEAM
Glasgow BNP line up with the party trophy

BNP focus on the regions: (1)

OF ALL the BNP regions in 1989, Yorkshire — particularly West Yorkshire — has grown the fastest in terms of real support.

Hundreds of new supporters have flocked to the BNP standards this year. At the moment, the BNP is almost able to recruit at will in the West Riding, and new groups are springing up so fast that the biggest job the BNP faces in the area now is that of consolidating its gains and organising the members and supporters the party has won over. This means that the massive recruiting drive now underway cannot be allowed to slacken.

At the moment the BNP has one strong base in the Leeds/Bradford area with its own regional HQ and smaller groups in Wakefield, Dewsbury, Huddersfield, Halifax, Sheffield, Doncaster and Hull.

Following reorganisation, Dewsbury will soon easily achieve branch status; Bradford will emerge as an independent group separate from Leeds; and new groups shortly to be announced will include Batley, Drighlington, Birkenshaw, Normanton and Ossett.

Even so, much more work is needed to increase support in the region's target areas of Bradford and York and in North, South and East Yorkshire generally.

Activities this year have included continued paper sales in Leeds city centre and at that famous hotbed of white nationalism Elland Road football ground. Paper sales have also been begun in Hull.

The two target areas of Bradford and York have received special attention from teams of activists. Across the entire region the task of promoting the party has involved distributing many thousands of leaflets, putting up thousands of stickers and selling great numbers of papers.

Major events this year in Yorkshire have been the tremendous rally in Dewsbury in June, when the BNP made national headlines and showed that growing numbers of white people, particularly the young, are fed up with the multi-racial madness and the old-gang political parties; last month's rally in Bradford, which won huge press coverage and TV coverage all over the North of England and Midlands; and, to come, a rally planned for York in November to celebrate Remembrance Day.

Without doubt, Yorkshire is at present the most prolific breeding ground for white nationalism in Britain. As it grows, Yorkshire is fast becoming a powerhouse for the BNP.

WHAT PRICE THE 'POST-WAR ORDER'?

The 'post-war' order, under which the two super powers have acted together in forcing our present intolerable conditions upon us, has prevailed for quite long enough. It is time for all of us, including Britain, to start stirring against this tyranny.

Nor is it any time for us to allow ourselves to be browbeaten by the words of Mr. Shevardnadze and his ilk into believing that our liberation is something we should fear. No doubt the present rulers of Britain, Europe and the United States will echo the Soviet Foreign Minister, but their propaganda should not be believed. In one way or another, most of them have their snouts in the same post-war dungheap as he.

Ending the 'post-war order' will not threaten the peace. But not ending it will mean the death of Britain, of Europe and of civilisation.

Government seem to think — they have a concrete political object in doing so, and have been encouraged by the actions of all governments over the past 20 years to believe that this object is on the way to being fulfilled — we refer of course to the railroading of Northern Ireland out of the United Kingdom.

Why do people take drugs? Here the reasons are a little more complex but someone with pretensions to being a national leader should at least have some glimmering of the causes. Perhaps Mrs. Thatcher is so dazzled by her mirage of the wonderful Britain that she and her policies have succeeded in creating that she is blind to the reality that, to many people, the Britain of today is a living hell — by this we do not mean a material hell so much as a spiritual, cultural and aesthetic hell, a society that has become hopelessly lost and disoriented, that is dedicated only to the pursuit of the shoddiest of goals and which, to many, is falling apart for lack of a strong authority to grip hold of it and give it direction.

It should be abundantly clear from this latest speech of the 'Iron Lady' that no such authority and no such direction will ever come from her. She clearly does not grasp the first rudiments of what ruling a nation is all about. Little surprise, therefore, that every time the IRA plant a bomb and kill people what we get from our Prime Minister is nothing better than the squawking of a baffled and frightened hen, whose feathers have been ruffled in the dark dead of night by some strange intruder that she can neither see nor comprehend.

BNP hits headlines again

BRADFORD RALLY MAKES PRESS, T.V. AND RADIO

THE FACT that the British National Party rally scheduled for Bradford on September 23rd took place at all amounted to something of a triumph of the will. Every conceivable obstacle was put in the way of the party exercising its right of freedom of assembly, but its own determination to do so won through.

The decision to hold the rally was made against a background of constant demonstrations and agitation by Bradford's Asian lobbies. The Asians had regularly been given access to public halls in the city, and thousands of them (Moslems in this case) had been allowed to hold a huge demonstration out of doors in the city centre earlier in the year to call for the gagging — and in some cases for the killing — of author Salman Rushdie.

The BNP only asked for the same rights of public assembly in Bradford as the Asians. However, its application to hire a municipally-owned hall in the city was instantly turned down by the City Council. Thereupon the party made an application to hold an outdoor rally in the city centre. This was placed in the hands of the local police, who made it clear at the outset that, although the big Moslem rally had been allowed in that area, the BNP could not use it. The BNP, the police said, would have to be content with a meeting site some way out of the centre of the city. The party thereupon requested that it be allowed to stage the rally in the Eccleshill district, where it had fought a local election not so long ago and obtained a respectable result — this indicating that the party had some support in the area.

The police informed the party that they would try to arrange a site as near as possible to the area requested.

POLICE KEEP LOCATION SECRET

As the time for the rally grew near, the BNP requested the police that they inform the party of the location of the rally, as the party needed to advertise that location to those many members of the Bradford public who had expressed an interest in attending the rally. This request was refused, and the location kept from the party — making it effectively impossible to advertise the rally!

Britain is supposed to be a country where freedom of assembly is a basic right. However, it is elementary that freedom of assembly cannot properly exist if those assembling are not permitted to advertise the place of assembly to all interested parties. To all intents and purposes, the BNP was obliged to make its rally a purely private one, confined to its own inner circle of members and supporters, since no means existed to advertise it to the public.

There is not the slightest doubt in our mind that this police decision was made at the very top level, probably involving consultation with the Home Secretary. With the ordinary average police officer the party has no quarrel and generally receives fair treatment. At county Chief Constable level, however, decisions are determined by political considerations, and here the party has to contend regularly with grossly unfair treatment. Bradford was just such a case.

Eventually, the police shunted the BNP to a site on the edge of a sportsground right on the outer fringe of the Bradford area. It was quite impossible there to assemble an audience which fairly reflected the big local interest in the party. The police restricted the rally to half an hour's duration. Very short speeches were made by guest speaker Lady Jane Birdwood, David Bruce and John Tyndall.

HUGE COVERAGE

So much for the bad news; now for the good news. In the outcome, the BNP rally, small though it was, won massive media coverage both before and after the event. It occupied many columns in the Yorkshire newspapers, was constantly mentioned on local radio and, best of all, was the subject of two TV interviews, with Deputy National Organiser Tony Wells and party leader John Tyndall. The latter interview was broadcast all over the North of England and Midlands.

The BNP's day in Bradford was therefore a success in the end — but not quite in the way planned!

After the rally, the party sent a formal complaint to the Chief Constable of West Yorkshire concerning the police action in preventing the rally venue being advertised to the public.

What we stand for

- And end to party warfare in Britain and the establishment of a government of national unity, with a parliament elected by occupational franchise
- British withdrawal from the European Common Market
- Termination of the multi-racial Commonwealth but closer co-ordination of the White Commonwealth
- Protection of British industry by the selective exclusion of foreign manufactured goods from Britain; the creation of full employment by the building up of domestic industries to produce goods to replace those now imported
- A sane financial system that will give the people the purchasing power to buy the goods they produce
- Massive regeneration of British farming, so as to enable the nation to achieve much greater self-sufficiency in food production
- British ownership and control of British industry and resources
- An end to immigration and a start to repatriation of ethnic minorities
- A massive switch of overseas aid to helping the needy at home
- The strengthening of Britain's defences, including restoration of national service
- Tougher treatment of criminals, including the return of the death penalty
- The smashing of the IRA, the termination of the Anglo-Irish Agreement and firm support for the loyalist majority in Northern Ireland
- A massive national effort to restore traditional moral values, aimed at strengthening the family and recreating the fabric for a sound and healthy social order
